

13 BACHELORS PREFER SINGLE BLESSEDNESS

University Men Who Fear High
Cost of a Wife Organize
Club That Scoffs at Matrimony.

ARE NOT WOMAN HATERS
Members Seek Temptation to Marry By Having Dates—
Pity the Love-Blind and Teahounds.

Men! Attention! Before paying that $1 down and installments of from $100 to $1000 a month for a wife, stop and think. There may be some other form of society better than marriage.

At any rate, thirteen men students in the University have decided that there is a more desirable state than that of matrimony. In fact, they think that this is one state which should never have been allowed in the Union. These men prefer a bachelors' club to that cruel weapon of the ante-bellum days—the rolling pin. Because of this performance and a solemn resolve never to marry they have organized the Bachelors' Club.

Most of the rules set down in the constitution of this club are secret, but some of them are willingly divulged so that those love-blind brothers, walking on the dangerous brink of matrimony, may apply these rules, and so turn their taffy-bound feet to the broad field of freedom.

One important rule is that each member must post his "dates" so they can be seen by all other members. Oh, yes! Of course, these men have "dates." It is easy for misogynists to remain single, but the members of this club are not woman haters. They actually like like women. Their reason for going with girls is to increase the temptation to marry. Instead of avoiding temptation they hunt for it. This may explain why the club is located at 1217 Broadway—directly north of Stephens College.

Perhaps the rule which can be enforced with the paddle will be of most interest to the smitten youth. This rule is that no member shall have "dates" in excess of the number necessary to constitute a sufficient temptation for him. The weak members are thus protected from a dangerous fate. If, however, any member should be overcome by temptation and get married, the club will not punish him. They consider that his punishment will probably be severe enough, anyway.

The following are the officers of the Bachelors' Club: President, Bernard Van Hoffman; vice-president, Harry E. Dold; secretary-treasurer, William A. Mesker; sergeant-at-arms, Thaddeus S. Allen; other members, Eugene T. Hogue, Stanley E. Rickhoff, Gilbert W. Hilla, Eugene T. Stout, William Ulrich, Brice Durbin, W. Haebler, R. C. King, and Clyde Nichols.

Russell Schmidt, a student at University High School, is an associate member but, as one man explained while flourishing a well-shaped paddle, "he hasn't been made a real member of the club yet."

All the divisions in the University are represented in the club except the School of Law.

"That's one mistake we haven't made yet," said one member, "but we're looking around for a law student. However, we do not solicit members; they must first ask to join before we can take them in."

It is a fairly safe prediction that some of these men will be bachelors for the rest of their lives—Bachelors of Science or Arts at any rate. Whether they will remain single is not so certain.

The house occupied by this club is rented and managed by Mrs. J. D. Jamison who is "sponsor" and not matron, according to the bachelors. She says that unless a man vows never to marry he cannot stay in her house.

MORE CANNED GOODS USED

Housewives Used Few Preserved Foods Fifty Years Ago.

With winter comes an appreciable increase in the use of canned foodstuffs. It is now known through scientific research that fresh vegetables contain certain essentials which one needs in the winter as well as in the summer, and the can preserves these foodstuffs for us. Grocers say that more canned goods are sold in the late winter and early spring than in the early winter, since housewives first use what has been canned in the home and then resort to store goods.

This is the era of the canned goods. Fifty years ago oysters were practically the only edible put up in cans. There has been a change in the mental attitude of housewives since that time. Women of today say that it was many years after the advent of canned food before the prejudice was overcome. Now canned goods are a mainstay of the pantry.

DEAN JONES' OFFICE FILLED

Not All Students Who Go There Are "Flunking."

"Oh, here I am again in this horrid old office," sighs the woman student as she takes her place in the extensive circle that gathers daily in office of J. C. Jones, dean of the College of Arts and Science.

"There is Wally Wally over there. He was up here the last time I was called. That bloomin' old English course. I just knew I should have had an 'M' and I only got an 'I'. Think of it, and I wasn't flunking but one other course. I'm disgusted. Who is that talking to Wally? Look at the crowd. Does everyone else in school have to see the dean? Say are you dated for Saturday night?"

Then a restful silence falls as the dean, speaking in a mild firm voice, accompanies the last survivor to the door and bids another enter. In the reception room the secretary answers questions in the most patient voice imaginable and directs new arrivals to be seated.

The card on the door announces the office hour from 10 to 12 o'clock but if one would have himself presented to the dean with any degree of certainty he had better go early. That is what many students do, so eager are they to meet the unknown possibilities of the curt little card which requested their presence at a certain hour of a certain day.

But not everyone who calls to see the dean does so because he may be failing to make passing grades, for like Rome, all paths lead there. Credit is an intricate thing and requires constant attention. It is a fortunate student who can enter the University and complete a few terms' work without some nerve-racking hours trying to keep his credits straight.

At this particular season of the year dozens of freshmen are beginning to realize the futility of going to college. When an unreasonable professor persists in filling his record with 'F's' it is time to seek different scenery. So they file in unabashed and each presenting a particular reason ask for the little yellow slip which sets them free from 8 o'clock classes and mid-term examinations.

Junior English Test Tomorrow. The Junior English examination of the School of Journalism will be held at 9 a. m. tomorrow in the auditorium of Jay H. Neff Hall.
